

DENIES MARIE DORO IS RUNAWAY GIRL

Frohman Manager Disputes
Claim Actress Is California
Woman's Daughter.

The story now going the rounds that Marie Doro, the Frohman star, who appeared with success in London, is the runaway daughter of Mrs. Douglas Saunders, a widow, of San Rafael, Cal., is emphatically denied by Al Hayman, executive manager of the Frohman staff.

Theatrical circles along Broadway were much stirred yesterday by a dispatch from San Rafael, in which it was claimed by Mrs. Saunders that Miss Doro was her long-lost daughter, who ran away from her Western home more than four years ago. To give weight to her claim, the woman stated that the identification was made through the many pictures of the pretty actress, which have appeared from time to time in the magazines, and that she has corresponded with the stage celebrity for some months.

She even claims that as Miss Doro's mother, she has been the recipient of handsome remittances from the actress. The pictures, which she claims to be those of her child, bear striking resemblance to Miss Doro.

Despite the fact that the woman's claim appears not unreasonable, and also being real fretful because he does not believe a word of it, Al Hayman sees the press agency side of it and breaks forth into print with a strong denial.

"Why, such a claim is too ridiculous," said Mr. Hayman. "It is absurd. Miss Doro's real name is Marie H. Stuart. She is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Richard Stuart, formerly of Kansas City, and now of New York. Marie Doro is this moment at Paul Smith's, in the Adirondacks, with her parents. Her father has a law office in New York, at 25 Broad street."

PROPER WAY TO USE PAPER PATTERNS FOR WAISTS INSURING STYLE

The most essential thing in making a shirt waist is a good pattern, and the best patterns are cut for perfect models. Realizing that not one person in twenty has a perfect form, it will be necessary to eliminate some features of the garment or supply something. First, cut out the fronts of the waist by placing the material end to end, or fold over material sufficient for two lengths. Pin the pattern carefully, cut and make all notches. Leave paper patterns on the material until all pieces are cut out.

Cut the sleeves next, and then the back. The small pieces are used for bands, collars and the like. Never sew a tight seam without first basting the garment together. If the waist, when put together, is too long on the shoulders or too high, begin pinning the seam from the neck to the edge. Often one shoulder is higher than the other—a common defect. Put a pin at the waist as a guide for a waist line. Pin the waist down the front, or back if it fastens in the back, draw the waist down over the hips and see if the under-arm seams are too large or small. If too small, take the garment off and rebaste. Get the perfect shape first, then take all pieces apart and apply lace trimming before sewing seams. If one is sure a pattern will fit, the lace can be firmly stitched on after the pieces are cut. If the armhole is too large, trim only on the under side, taking out a crescent about one-eighth of an inch, or larger if necessary.

SUMMER GIRLS SPENDING MUCH TIME GETTING READY FOR CHRISTMAS GIFTS

The girl on the piazza of the summer cottage or hotel is very busy these days getting ready Christmas presents or gifts for autumn brides.

Among the many dainty things she is making is a wash pin cushion. First, there is a six-inch narrow pillow covered with colored silk with an inside layer of sachet.

For this she cuts two covers equal in size to extend three inches beyond the cushion.

Linen or muslin or cotton chiffon are all used for these covers, but the preference is given to fine coarse linen, which can go to the tub every week.

The edges of both pieces are cut in shallow long scallops, deeply buttonhole with white or colored floss, and across the center of the top cover the initials are embroidered in square block letters.

Above the scallops is a line of long buttonholes, handsomely worked with crown's feet at the upper ends. These buttonholes must exactly match on the cover. They are laid on the cushion and joined by one-inch colored ribbon tied in a large bow at each end.

This is not a costly pin cushion, and makes one of the most acceptable gifts that a bride can get. If more than one is considered necessary, make a set of four, using different colors, one cushion to each room.

SACHETS ARE MADE OF LAVENDER HEADS

Quaint, Pungent Odor Is as Healthful as It Is Delightful.

One of the sachets prepared for the English bazaars is made from lavender heads. Of course, lavender can be bought here in quantities, and its quaint, pungent odor is as healthful as it is clean smelling. A novel way of packing the lavender at these bazaars was the placing of it in flat baskets instead of the ordinary bags of various sizes, shapes, and materials.

The lavender is first placed in cheesecloth and then fitted tightly into the basket, the cloth being brought over the top and the cover then fastened down. The basket should be packed as tightly as possible and filled with lavender ribbons, matching the color of the lavender flowers. The basket should be open enough to admit of the ready escape of the odor. These baskets, when flat and not large, may be easily packed in drawers and with one's folded clothes.

Is used to scent a room large baskets should be filled and the cover left so it may be untied and thrown back, the top of the cheesecloth or gauze-covered heads being veiled by a bit of lavender china silk or other suitable thin material, embroidered perhaps in silver or lavender, and tied at each corner to the basket with a narrow lavender ribbon. The lid should be shut at night to keep the scent in, and if it is desired to retain the scent a long time the basket may be lined throughout with chamomile skin or something of that nature, so that only when the basket is open can the scent freely escape.

Easily Made Scent Boxes.
Another lavender scent case may be made of a small flat cardboard box, which should be perforated with many small holes. A stiletto is the proper instrument for doing this. Then fill with lavender. The box should be of the sort in which the top comes quite to the bottom of the box, or else of the type where the edges meet in the center so that the sides may be smooth.

Then take a bit of suede or leather or any brocade or cretonne and make a cover like a book cover. Two bits of cretonne or leather joined over the back of the box, where the title of the book appears, with a strip of different leather or plain stuff, makes a pretty cover. On the back of the book the title, or a fancied name, may be printed in lavender ink.

A Quaint Conceit.
One such volume of perfume had the white edges of the box striped with many fine lines with violet ink, to represent the edges of the leaves, and a tiny book cover was made out of a bit of green tulle, the exact size of the box; presumably a box large enough to tie the tapestry was selected. The woven edges of the tapestry were turned under, and the whole was lined with dull green, tulle silk slip, stitched to the tapestry.

Down the back of the book a strip of dull light green satin ribbon just the depth of the box was drawn taut, a bit of pasteboard being slipped under the tapestry, and across this ribbon in slanting letters, the title was painted in lavender ink. The cover was then tied on the box by three strips of narrow silver braid, arranged like clasps, one at each end and one in the center, the ends being sewed under the edges of the tapestry.

The holes in the cardboard top and bottom were quite large, as the tapestry and silk inside were rather heavy covering. Another book was a white celluloid box full of holes covered with lace, and tied with lavender ribbon. On the lavender satin back was printed in pale green, "Lavender and Old Lace."

WITH PARTY ATTIRE.
All the little novelties which go to finish the dainty toilet of a little maiden are interesting to loving mothers and friends. The very newest idea is to embroider a hair ribbon.

The ordinary five-inch ribbon is used in tulle or satin, as the case may be, and a design is made at the mitered end, while the buttonhole stitch keeps the edge from unraveling. The idea is pretty, particularly when the ribbon is made to match the hair ribbon. Of course, one would not embroider an ordinary hair ribbon intended for school wear, but for party attire it is just a little touch, for little maidens may not wear the ornaments and trimmings appropriate for older girls.

The embroidery is done in silk and Persian floss—the former used to carry out the design, the latter to work the buttonhole stitch.

SIMPLE GIRLISH NEGLIGEE

By MAY MANTON.

Young girls always are made happy by the addition of some pretty negligee to the wardrobe and this one can be made so easily and quickly that it commends itself at once. Sleeves and body portion are in one, so that there are very few seams to be stitched and the labor of placing the sleeves in the armholes is entirely eliminated. Pretty figured cotton crepes, such as this one, are youthful and inexpensive, challis and cashmeres are admirable for boarding school and college use and the heavier wash flannels and flannellette also can be utilized, while for very dainty kimonos Japanese silk is lovely and Japanese cotton crepes make pretty ones of medium weight and great durability. Any contrasting material or ribbon can be used for the bands.

For a girl of sixteen years of age 6 yards of material 24, 32 or 44 inches wide with 1 yard of silk for bands will be needed; but if the short sacque is wanted 3 yards of any width will be sufficient.

PONGEE SKIRTS FINISHED WITH CLOTH BAND TO BE SEEN SOON

The early autumn will see a fashion for combining cloth and pongee that is old and effective. The heavy, dyed pongee will be used and the cloth, trimmed with soutache, will match it.

The style that is coming out is for a skirt of pongee finished with a six-inch band of cloth, and then a coat of cloth finished with turnover cuffs and collar of pongee.

When soutache is used, it is of the same shade and is put on in star design, which is a stylish substitute for the classic border.

RESEATING CHAIRS WITH LEATHER CHEAPEST IN LONG RUN

It is a very good idea when a chair needs reseating to make it over with a seat of leather. It wears for a much longer time than a cane seat and is, in the end, far less expensive. The leather may be procured at any harness maker's, and strips about one and one-half inches wide are needed. These are woven in and out and fastened to the four sides of the chair. It will require for the average-size chair about eight strips either way. When brass tacks fasten each strip at the end it makes a real good-looking affair. This sort of seat is particularly effective if the chair is made of Flemish oak or mission style, and it is an admirable addition to the furniture.
